PSsst ... Hopes that the author Zoe Foster's new novel Playing the Field was a kiss-and-tell about her decade-long fling with the football pretty boy Craig Wing - they are pictured here - are a little off the mark. Despite their relationship fizzling out last year, Foster has plenty of experience living life as a football WAG and even thanks Wing in her acknowledgments: "Thank you to Craig and the NRL for granting me access and insight into the football world - I, quite literally, couldn't have written this without you." While several of the characters have been inspired by Sydney's most celebrated WAGs, names and places have been blurred somewhat to protect their identities. Foster is a little more candid about her own experiences as Wingy's WAG, such as the time she read in Sydney newspapers (for four weeks in a row) about her boyfriend being linked to model Lara Bingle. Or the time she read about him dating a mysterious brunette at the movies. She turned out to be his sister.
